

How to Protect Your Home from Raw Sewage

Oro Loma works very hard to maintain its record of having one of the lowest sewage overflow rates in California. But it is impossible to eliminate all the variables that can cause an overflow.

A backflow protection system installed on your lateral—the pipe that connects your home plumbing to the sewer main—will prevent sewage from backing up into your home from a blockage or overflow in the sewer main. The system redirects the sewage to your yard, rather than allowing it to come up through drains inside your home. The system consists of an extendable backwater check valve, the overflow device, and a two-way clean-out. The backwater check valve has a one-way valve that allows wastewater to flow in only one direction—away from your house. Note: The backflow protection system will only keep sewage from the street's sewer main out of your home. It will not help if your lateral is clogged between your house drain and the device.

An overflow prevention system has been approved for use in Oro Loma. Though there is no permit fee for installing the system, we recommend installation by a licensed plumber. Keep the system clear of obstructions, such as dirt or vegetation, which might interfere with its operation.
